THE JUNIOR COLLEGE

At the present time there are more than four hundred junior colleges in the United States. Most of them have originated within the last twenty-five years. This development, the so-called "Junior College Movement," is perhaps the most striking feature among the many changes that have taken place in the educational field in recent times.

The junior college curriculum covers the field of the freshman and sophomore classes of the four-year college, and in addition often reaches down to include the work of the last two years of high school. Its special departments may offer work in Commerce, Home Economics, Music, Art, Expression, etc. All of these special subjects are offered at Anderson College.

The junior college has a wide appeal. Its graduates have the option of rounding out their educational careers at the end of the two-year college course or of going on to college or university elsewhere. Its academic work is ordinarily acceptable for credit to higher institutions. Besides this, the relative compactness of the student body, the close personal contact between student and instructor, the wholesome and congenial atmosphere, all combine to render the junior college peculiarly suited to the needs of many young boys or girls leaving home for the first time. These several considerations account for the wide appeal of the junior college, and for its striking growth as an institutional form.

There are junior colleges in practically every state of the Union, in many states a very large number of them. Anderson College is the only one in South Carolina. It has functioned as a junior college since the fall of 1930.

This building houses the offices, the parlors, and the principal classrooms. It is the central building of the campus group.

COURSES OF INSTRUCTION

The college department of Anderson College offers, in general, two types of courses, preparatory and terminal. The preparatory or general course prepares for continuance of study in another institution. It has been specifically designed to fit students for entrance into the junior class of Winthrop College, of the University of South Carolina, and of other institutions of recognized standing. Its details have been worked out in consultation with the officials of the first named institution, which is the largest college for women in South Carolina.

The terminal course is offered for students having no definite plans for further study; it is therefore a "rounding out" course.

Besides these two courses are offered a Teachers' Course entitling the graduate to receive a first-grade elementary teachers' certificate in South Carolina, and a Home Economics Major Course.

The Academy, covering the last two years of high school work, constitutes a separate division of the college. Its arrangements are quite flexible, and it is in position to provide for the needs of those students whose work has previously been, for one reason or another, somewhat irregular.

The expense of any of the courses here described is included in the regular tuition charge, which is basically the same for all the courses. The satisfactory completion of any of the college courses entitles the student to the Junior College Diploma.

The courses of study offered in special departments are briefly described elsewhere on this page and the pages immediately following. The several special subjects are open both to students who wish to pursue them independently and to those who wish to take them as extras along with the regular college work. The charges for the special courses are made on a different scale from that of the regular college work, and vary according to the nature and the amount of work taken.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Realizing the value of the commercial subjects—type-writing, shorthand, bookkeeping, etc., the college gives extensive work in this field. One- and two-year Secretarial Courses are offered. In both the curriculum is integrated with that of the academic department of the school, so that the advantages are greater than those commonly enjoyed by the student of a business college. Two awards are made—certificate and diploma; which one the student secures depends on the course taken and the degree of proficiency attained.

DEPARTMENT OF HOME ECONOMICS

The laboratories of this department are exceptionally well-equipped for practical instruction in cooking and sewing. The theoretical work is, as in the case of the commercial department, integrated with that of the academic branch of the college. Besides Foods and Clothing, advanced courses are given in House Furnishing, Dietetics and Nutrition, and Art and Dress Design. The Junior College Diploma is awarded on satisfactory completion of the Home Economics Major course.

MAIN WALK FROM PLAZA OF ADMINISTRATION BUILDING

The main approach to the college, shown here, leads up from one of the principal streets of Anderson, the Boulevard.

ANDERSON COLLEGE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The Studio of the Dean

The savant who said that "life without music would be a mistake" would feel at home at Anderson College; for music figures prominently in the general life of the institution, while the School of Music is exceptionally well staffed and equipped. A variety of studios specially furnished, separate and isolated practice rooms, and a large auditorium with excellent acoustic properties are afforded. A modern pipe organ is available for those desiring to study this instrument. In addition, the city of Anderson is a center of considerable interest in music; public music recitals are numerous, and the city has a large music club whose activities bring it into constant contact with the music department of the college.

Complete courses in piano, pipe organ, violin, and voice are offered. Music theory, music history, and advanced work in piano are taught by the Dean of the Department, Miss Grace L. Cronkhite, an exceptionally well-qualified teacher whose pupils have enjoyed uniformly a high rating among musicians in musical centers and in the communities in which they make their homes. Pipe organ is taught by the Dean also.

Instruction in piano for beginners is given by a special teacher. The Dunning Kindergarten Method, whose merit is commonly recognized, is employed. A third instructor in piano for intermediate work is available.

The Department of Voice, headed by a special instructor, equips the student for teaching, church and concert work, and singing in the home. Public School Music is also taught. An active Glee Club, integrated with the department and directed by its head, contributes much to the music life of the college and the Anderson community. Several certificates from the School of Music are awarded according to the course pursued and the degree of proficiency attained. The highest degree, the Artist's Diploma, requires four years of study and the rendering of a public recital. The several courses of study and the requirements for the several certificates and for diploma are outlined in the college catalogue, copy of which will be sent on request.

FRONT CAMPUS IN SPRING

● The front part of the campus is landscaped in a series of rising terraces, with appropriate walks and drive-ways. Here are held, from time to time, out-of-door ceremonies and similar functions.

SIDE VIEW OF DORMITORY

The dormitories are separate from the main building, but connected with it by glass-enclosed corridors. All buildings are heated by steam generated in a central plant.

The campus is grass covered and contains more than a hundred beautiful oaks. Especially during the spring season is its beauty an object of admiration to passers-by.

CAMPUS LOOKING SOUTHWEST

"When summer is green"—an inviting spot! Owing to the early advent of spring in the latitude of Anderson the campus is dressed in its best for about six weeks before the close of school.

THE LODGE

The thirty-two acres of beautifully rolling land on which the college is situated lie in the heart of the best residential district of Anderson, and just at the edge of the city. Paved highways approach it from each of the points of the compass, and a street-car line runs to the college entrance.

DEPARTMENTS OF EXPRESSION AND FINE ARTS

MISS KATHRYN COPELAND
Dean of Faculty

Anderson College maintains a special instructor in expression. Training is wholly individual. The student is gradually prepared for public performance, for which there are many opportunities in the school and the city in which it is located. The numerous student activities of the school give to every one who wishes it the chance to gain experience in appearing before an audience. Students frequently have the lead in chapel exercises, and in addition the occasional production of a play is an enlivening feature of the college year.

Facilities for work in expression and dramatics are exceptional. The well-lighted and unusually large stage of the college auditorium makes possible the production of almost any sort of performance that it might be desirable to give.

Expression may be studied separately or as a special two-year course leading to the Diploma in Expression. Post-graduate work is also offered.

The Department of Fine Arts offers no separate course and so no diploma, this work being given largely in connection with other lines of instruction. However, for those desiring it, it may be taken separately. The subjects taught are Art Structure, Public School Art, Freehand Drawing, and Painting.

ACTIVITIES

Anderson College is located in one of the most beautiful regions of the Piedmont Section. The life of the city in which it is situated embodies the best traditions of the Southland. The thirty-two acre campus and the new and excellently constructed buildings are one of the centers of the community life of the city. Boarding students are welcome everywhere among the hospitable people, and the accommodations of the dormitories offer them all the advantages of home life.

The college was founded as a school for women, and as regards its boarding accommodations it is still exclusively such a school. But after it became a junior college, in response to a demand from the many young men of the city and county of Anderson who desired the advantages of college education in the local community, it opened its doors to boys as day students. The college thus became partly co-educational; and since the change has added to the life of the institution, the new policy is regarded as successful.

Among the more important student activities are: the International Relations Club—a charter member, by the way, of the Southern Association of International Relations Clubs; the Science Club; the Anderson College Glee Club; Pi Pi, an organization in the Home Economics Department based on scholastic standing; and Phi Theta Kappa, a junior college honor society corresponding to the Phi Beta Kappa in four-year colleges and universities.

The religious life of the institution is in many respects central, and there are a number of religious organizations.

Athletics and the physical well-being of the students in general are stressed. The campus affords many facilities for athletic activities; and in addition there are frequent hikes and excursions for shorter or longer distances into the countryside, the edge of which practically touches the edge of the campus. A feature of the college year is the annual "October Day," on which the entire personnel of the school adjourns to field and wood for a high old time in the mild autumn weather. Similar fun-making marks "May Day" in the spring. Physical education is an integral part of every course of study offered. The college employs a woman physician and a nurse, and there is a well-equipped infirmary. Access to all of these is available without extra charge except in cases of protracted illness.

The general atmosphere of the college is homelike. A spirit of good fellowship and of liberality prevails. Not even the most timid young freshman requires more than a few days to become adjusted, and to feel something of the same love for the new environment into which she has come that she feels for her own home.
